Conference Content
As we all know, most teenagers cannot imagine life without Twitter, Instagram, SnapChat and Facebook. Nearly one in four adolescents say they’re online “almost constantly,” with much of that time dominated by social media. Recent studies find that teens who use social media for two hours or more per day are significantly more likely to suffer from poor mental health, psychological distress and suicidal thoughts. This timely and interactive conference will educate attendees on how social media is impacting their adolescent clients. We’ll discuss best practices for using new media and social media as well as ethical implications, and the impact social media has as a possible suicide contagion.

Outcomes
At the conclusion of this training, participants will be able to:
1) Understand societal changes resulting from new media and social media
2) Understand the ethical implications of using new media and social media as a therapist
3) Understand the clinical implications of new media and social media and how they impact the patients therapists work with.
4) Understand best practices for integrating new media and social media into research and practice of psychotherapy.
5) Understand ways that social media can contribute to suicide contagion
6) Understand how social media can be used to reduce suicide risk by promoting social support, reducing stigma, and increasing access to critical mental health resources

Who Should Attend
Social Workers, Counselors, Marriage and Family Therapists, Psychologists, Chemical Dependency Counselors, and Nurses

Presentation Format
A multi-modal format, including PowerPoint presentations, video, discussion, Q & A and audience interaction will be utilized. Informational handouts will also be distributed.

About Our Speakers

Dr. Ali Mattu is a clinical psychologist who specializes in the treatment of anxiety and body-focused repetitive behaviors. He aspires to bring psychology to everyone, everywhere by hosting THE PSYCH SHOW, writing about the psychology of science fiction at Brain Knows Better, presenting to the public, and advocating for the brain and behavior sciences through the American Psychological Association. Dr. Mattu is a faculty member at the Columbia University Clinic for Anxiety and Related Disorders. He received his B.A. from the University of California, Los Angeles where he majored in psychology and minored in Asian American studies. Dr. Mattu received his Ph.D. in clinical psychology from The Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C. He completed a doctoral internship at the Bellevue Hospital Center and a post-doctoral fellowship at the NYU Langone Medical Center’s Child Study Center. Dr. Mattu is known as a “forward thinker” in the field of psychology and was named one of The Mighty’s mental health heroes of 2015.

Dr. John Ackerman currently serves as the Suicide Prevention Coordinator for the Center for Suicide Prevention and Research (CSPR) at Nationwide Children's Hospital. He directs community, school, and hospital efforts to educate others about the risks and warning signs of pediatric suicide. The CSPR promotes evidence-based strategies to support individuals at risk for depression and suicide. Dr. Ackerman and his team are passionate about reducing the devastating impact of suicide on the community. Dr. Ackerman obtained his Ph.D. in clinical psychology from the University of Delaware (2006) funded by an NIMH grant to study how disruptions in child caregiver relationships influence children’s social and cognitive development. Dr. Ackerman subsequently completed his postdoctoral fellowship at the University of Maryland School of Medicine (2008) investigating the effects of prenatal drug exposure through adolescence.
